Tinley Lions Advocate Zoning System

Mr. DeLowe, of Kelker, DeLowe Shows Benefit of Zoning In Address

Zoning and sewerage, also street paving projects were the subjects of discussion at the Tinley Park Lions Club meeting Monday night. Mr. DeLowe of the firm of Kelker, DeLowe of Chicago, who are serving as village engineers for Tinley Park gave a very illuminating address on the merits of a zoning ordinance and showed in a comprehensive way the benefits Tinley Park will derive if a zoning ordinance is adopted making reasonable restrictions of the residence and business sections. Mr. DeLowe pointed out that Tinley is in the path of development and it is going to mean much to the future of the community as to what kind of people are attracted here. He pointed out that if the residents of a town do not take pride and interest in it to attract the right kind of new people, the undesirable class will move in. Mr. DeLowe showed that if a man puts up a modern and pretty home and another man puts up a ramshackle building on an adjoining lot it means that the latter is pulling money out of the home owners pocket, for cheap shacks will lessen the value of property. He further declared that without a zoning ordinance any kind of unwelcome business could be located in a residence district with resultant real estate value depreciation. He showed that at one time the courts frowned on zoning ordinances, but that now they are upholding this law readily. The law, as a rule, always trails behind in the march of progress the speaker declared and after a certain movement has been tried out by the citizens and found to be much desired, then the law also is in line to uphold it.

Mr. DeLowe showed how a city that is not zoned has many problems to contend with. To illustrate his point, he called attention to a condition he found in New York city while visiting there last year. In the famous Central Park district are beautiful cut stone residences while at the end of the street are small shops and fish markets with a multitude of odors.

Mr. Waterman, also of the firm of Kelker DeLowe gave an instructive talk on the sewerage problem of the small town and stated that a community sewerage tank or plant will be required in the future as the state board of health will require that all sewerage water be treated. Mr. Waterman showed how zoning and proper sewerage will build up a community. He cited his home town of Libertyville as an example. A few years ago without a zoning law and modern sewerage it had a little over 2000 population, but since zoning has been adopted and a modern sewerage system laid the population has increased over 1500 within a few years. The sale of commuters tickets on the electric line has increased from 50 tickets a month to over 300 a month at present. Modern improvements and a progressive spirit on the part of the citizens have made a live community in this instance.

Mr. DeLowe characterized the apartment house builder in a developing community as a parasite as he only figures on how much he will be able to make on his investment and the class of people he brings to a community are the usual fly-by-night kind. Zoning laws will prevent apartment builders from locating in a residence district.

The Tinley Lions Club zoning committee will meet next Monday night to go further into the zoning proposition.

Tinley Couple Observe Golden Wedding Fete

Mr. Christoph Schilling and his wife Mary nee Witt, celebrated their Fiftieth wedding anniversary last Sunday at their home in Blue Island. Mr. Schilling was born Oct. 26, 1853 near Tinley Park and lived on a farm most of the time. Only temporarily he lived in Chicago. He retired from active farm life about three years ago, then moving to Blue Island.

Mrs. Mary Schilling was born on January 1, 1856 in Germany, emigrating to this country at the age of 11 years. On July 11, 1878 she was united in marriage by the late Rev. J. H. C. Martin of Bachelors Grove Lutheran church. The union was blessed with eight children, five of whom are living. They are: Chas., at home, Mrs. Anna Huhnstock, of Washington Heights, Mrs. Louise Weber at Charles City, Iowa, Mrs. Minnie Walters, Blue Island, Mrs. Amelia Evans of Blue Island.

The pastor, Rev. Wm. Greve delivered an address on Ps. 71:18 "When I am old and grayheaded, oh God, forsake me not, until I have showed Thy strength unto this generation and Thy power to everyone that is to come."

A splendid supper was served and many beautiful gifts were presented to the bride couple of fifty years ago. Among the guests were the following: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Huhnstock and family of Washington Heights; Mrs. Minnie Walters and family of Blue Island; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Evans and family also of Blue Island; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kott of Tinley Park; Mrs. Mary Ebeling, Orland Park; Mr. and Mrs. John Rothenberg of Orland Park; Mrs. August Witt and son William of Hammond, Indiana; Mrs. Emma Witt and family of Blue Island; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Loebe of Hammond, Ind.; Rev. Wm. Greve and family and Mrs. Louise Huhnstock of Tinley Park.

Tinley Lions 4th Celebration Is Financial Success

The Fourth of July celebration as staged by the Lions Club at Tinley Park was a financial success even though the weatherman tried his best to dampen it. The dance held at the Saenger hall by the Lions brought in over $500. Had the weather been favorable it is estimated that the proceeds would well have reached the thousand dollar mark.

Tinley May Adopt Aluminum Signs

The street naming and numbering program of the Lions Club of Tinley Park is well under way. At the meeting of the club Monday night, a representative of the Alumnoid Co., of Chicago was present and showed several designs of markers made of pressed aluminum ranging in price from $6.25 each up to $10. Some of the street signs have the lettering in bold face type and others in outline letters. The representative showed the simplicity with which these signs are erected.

Injuries Sustained In Recent Fall Prove Fatal

Philip Knater, for thirty years, a harness maker in Frankfort, Ill., died in Silver Cross hospital, Joliet, where he had been for the past two weeks as the result of injuries received when he fell down the stairs in the home of his sister, Mrs. Geo. Haass in Frankfort.

A collar bone and 3 ribs were broken and other internal injuries and bruises suffered from the fall. Pneumonia set in the last few days of his life and on Friday afternoon July 6th he passed away, having attained the age of 65 years.

The deceased's wife who before her marriage with Mr. Knater, was Lizzie Weber of Mokena, passed away four years ago, and since that time, Mr. Knater has been living with relatives. Their only child Cecil died when she was eight years old.

Those remaining to mourn the departed are, two brothers, Peter of Bremen township, Fred of Wisconsin. Four sisters, Mrs. Julius Pfaff, Mrs. Charles Pfaff, Sr., Mrs. Geo. Haass all of Frankfort and Mrs. Emma Kohl of Chicago. Four step-brothers, John Bango, Albert Knater of Chicago Heights, August and Henry Knater of Green Garden, two step-sisters, Miss Lena Bango of Frankfort and Mrs. Dick Folkers of Green Garden, and many other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held from the home of his sister Mrs. Chas. Pfaff Sr., Monday afternoon to St. Peter Evangelical church, Rev. G. S. Gerhold, pastor of the church officiating. Burial was in Pleasant Hill cemetery, Frankfort.

Orland Park 2nd Base Man Goes to Pirates

The Orland Park baseball team which has the record of being a real hot team, has had additional honors added to its laurels since Kyle Anderson, their second base man has signed up with the Majors.

Anderson was captain of the University of Chicago's baseball team, and played shortstop with the Macons and was a flashy fielder in addition to being the leading hitter in the big Ten. He has signed up with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The Orland Park team is justified in feeling quite chummy for having had such a famous player on their team.

Cooker Killed As Still Blows

Lamrence Guernini, an alcohol "cooker" employed by unknown persons, was burned to death in a flood of boiling mash and alcohol, when a still which he was tending at 139th Street and Racine avenue, exploded on Friday afternoon. County highway police, led by Deputy Elmer Keuch of Tinley Park hurried to the scene, but made no arrests as no one was in sight except some near-by residents, all Italians, who stated they did not know the still was there until it blew up and had seen no one enter or leave the big red barn that housed the contrivance. The dead man was removed to a Chicago morgue.

Sixteen barrels of mash were found, but no alcohol. About fifty five gallon alcohol containers were confiscated and smashed by the police together with a 100-gallon still. No clues as to the owners of the still were uncovered and the refusal of the neighbors to make any intelligent statements made the case a closed one as usual.

MOTORCYCLE AND AUTO CRASH

While Motorcycle policeman Geo. Smith of Tinley was going in pursuit of a speeder Sunday night on the concrete north of the village, his motorcycle crashed into the car of Dr. C. Sheer of Tinley when the latter turned at a corner. Officer Smith sustained a broken toe.

The committee on street signs and house numbering will work with the village board in carrying out this program.

Orland Park M. E. Choir Puts On Play

The Orland Park Players of the M. E. church of that town are presenting a three act comedy-mystery play entitled "Oh, Kay" at the Worth Community church, July 17.

The cast is selected from the Orland Park M. E. church choir and is as follows: Edith Whitman, writes love stories, Lois Ludwig; Evelyn Whitman, answers the phone, Pearl Cooper; Arthur Whitman, shaves once a week, Jake Kramer; Captain George Whitman, am I home?, Francis Glahn; Gram Pembroke, takes pills, Clarice Mahaffay; Alice Borden, run, run, Dorothy Cooper; The Black terror, Francis Yunker; Gram Pembroke, loves Lizzie, Clarence Mahaffay; Jim Hayes, thickens the gravy, Robert Cooper; Kay Millis, well?, Alice Mahaffay; Fred Alden, asks questions, Gustave Johanson. The play is being produced by special arrangement with Walter H. Baker Co., of Boston, Mass.

Francis Glahn is the business manager, George Munch stage manager, Clarence Beagle, electrician and Kingsley Povenmire, director.

The Orland Park Players will also present this play at Tinley Park at the Community Hall on July 27. Wells Corners church, Aug. 23 and also at the Masonic Temple Blue Island in August. It is also planned to give it at Mokena, altho no date has been announced as yet. The first town played was Orland Park on Friday night of this week. The proceeds are to go for the benefit of the Orland Park M. E. church choir.

The play starts 8:15 p. m., daylight saving time.

Auto and Truck Collide; Send 7 To Hospital

A potato chips products truck of Gary, Indiana and a touring car figured in a smash on the Lincoln highway near the county line east of Frankfort Thursday afternoon. It is reported that seven persons were injured and were taken to the St. James hospital in Chicago Heights. The truck caught fire and burned up. It is said the truck driver was lighting a cigaret when the crash happened.

Farmer Fined For Failure To Cut Thistles

War against farmers who allow Canada thistles to bloom on their farms unmolested has begun Saturday when the first arrest of the season was made by George Kennedy, thistle commissioner of New Lenox township.

Kennedy arrested G. C. Riker, of New Lenox township for this offense, which is said to make offenders liable to both criminal and civil action. Arraigned before Justice of the Peace Joseph A. Zerbes, Riker was fined $30 and costs. His fine and costs totaled $46.

Riker was ordered to cut his thistle crop before Wednesday night. According to Thistle Commissioner William Hinkel of Joliet township, other arrests will be made in Joliet township unless action by the farmers within the week is taken.

Mr. Hinkel points out that at present the thistles are in bloom but that in another week they will go to seed and as a result the land about them will be infested with the weeds next season. All farmers are urged to aid in curbing the weed which destroys other valuable crops.

MOKENA M. E. CHURCH NOTES

Glen T. Beatty, Pastor
Morning Worship 9:15 A. M.
Church School 10:30 A. M.
Come to church in the cool of the day, you will enjoy the service with us. Mr. Beatty will preach next Sunday as usual.

Last Friday night the finest Official Board meeting of some time was held. This was to check over reports, etc., in preparation for the coming of Dr. E. S. Lumsden, District Superintendent, July 22nd.

All but two members of the board were in attendance at this meeting. Reports for the year thus far were very favorable. Time was spent in discussing various business items of the church. All bills to date were reported paid. The conference year closes September 30th, though an effort is being made to close the books by September 15th, so that there will be ample time for preparing conference reports.

Dr. E. S. Lumsden, District Superintendent will bring us a short sermon on the night of Sunday, July 22nd at 7:30 P. M. Immediately after this brief service, our Quarterly Conference will be held. All people interested in the Methodist church are urged to be present at this time.

Mrs. W. J. Dano of Kansas City, Mo., and Mrs. F. A. Krusemark of Akron, Ohio, have been visiting at the home of their brother, F. C. Whitlark, and family the past few weeks.

Thomas Batell of Berwyn, nephew of Mrs. McMahon and Mrs. Whitlark, has returned home after visiting with relatives the past month.

Miss Charlotte Marus of Naperville is visiting at the Harvey Reah home this week.

In the Office—
Why Not the Home?

GOOD business office practice demands a telephone in every location where its use will save steps or time or in any way promote efficiency.

Why not the same thing in the home?

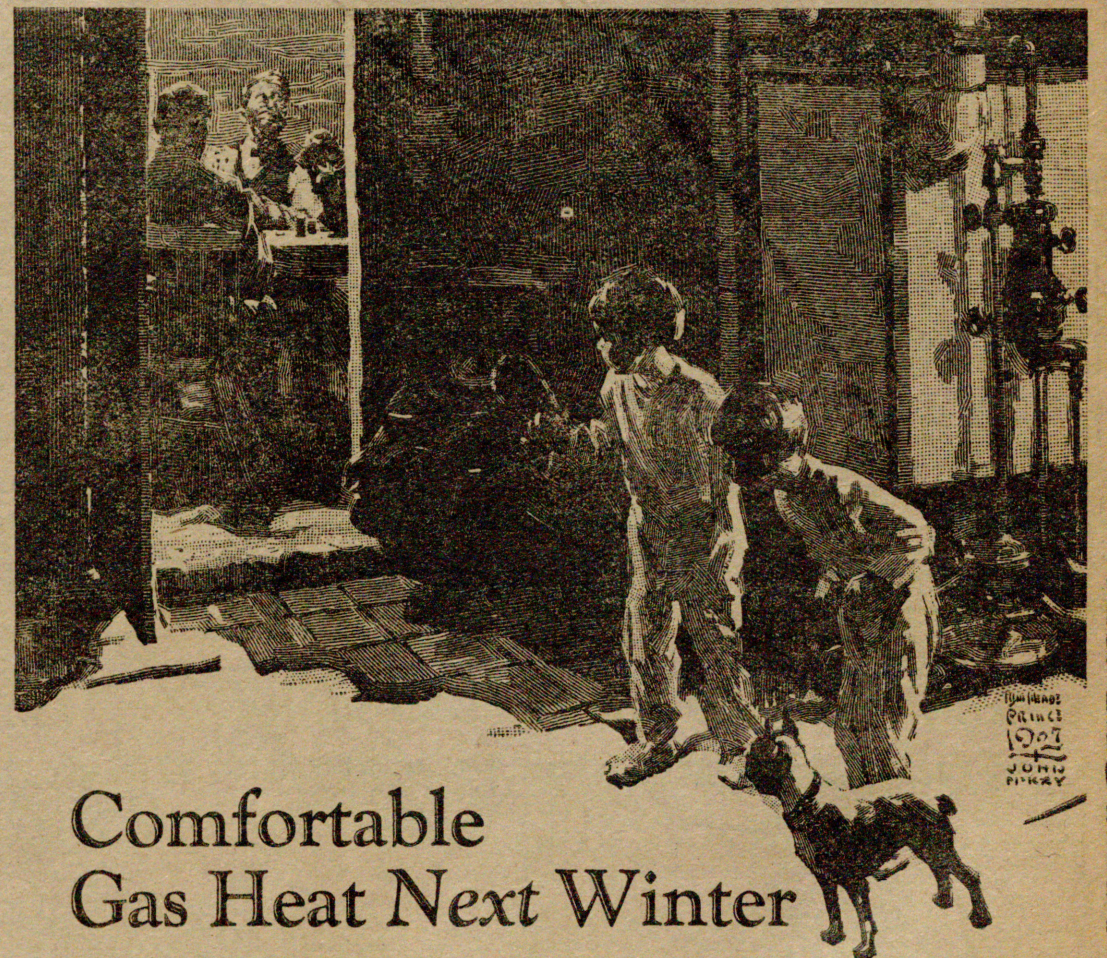

The folks at home are busy people, and step-saving and time-saving conveniences help to lighten the burden of household duties.

Furthermore, adequate telephone service in the home, with extensions where needed, is a convenience, a protection and an aid in emergencies.

Call our Business Office today and order an extension telephone for your home. The cost is small and the value great.

Mr. and Mrs. William Little are the proud parents of a baby girl born Monday evening of last week at the Roseland Community hospital.

Miss Minnie Beck has returned from a week's trip to Kentucky where she visited friends.

Another Theory of the Flood.
A new theory of the flood has been discovered in South Africa. Hydrographers investigating the waterways of Uganda have found indications that Lake Victoria and other central African lakes were at one time vast inland seas, which a little excess of rainfall would cause to overflow into the lands to the north. The discovery of primitive stone implements along the old water levels prove these to have been within the "human" period.

SHE HANDLES CALLS
ACROSS THE ATLANTIC

One of the German Telephone Operators at Berlin Switchboard

German telephone operators who handle the calls received and sent across the Atlantic by the radio telephone service are finding their task a busy one, as the number of such calls increases from week to week.

The inclusion of German cities in the Rhine Valley, which is a favorite region with American travelers, has increased the number of German cities having direct connection with the telephone system of the United States to fifteen. When the service was first opened it was limited to Berlin, Hamburg and Frankfurt-on-Main. A little later it was extended to Bremen, Dusseldorf, Cologne and Mannheim. The cities now being added are Munich, Nuremberg, Baden-Baden, Bad-Emms, Heidelberg, Karlsruhe (in Baden) Ludwigshafen and Pforzheim.

Facts About the Telephone

More than 74,000,000 telephonic conversations take place daily in the United States.

More than 66 per cent of the telephone transmission wire in the United States is in underground cable.

Of a total of about 31,000,000 in the world approximately 23,000,000, or 75 per cent, can be connected with the Bell System.

More than 9,000 telephone companies and some 30,000 rural lines furnish telephone service to the people of the United States.

The telephone has been substituted for the telegraph in the dispatching of trains on the Portland division of the Boston & Maine railroad.

There are approximately 20,000 telephone central offices in the United States. Of this number, over 6,000 are Bell owned and over 13,000 are independently owned but connecting with the Bell System. There are 647 central offices not connected with the Bell System.

AIDS BOND SALE

When a sale of the bonds of the state of Alabama was recently made, W. C. Bowman, Vice-President of the bank that negotiated the sale, placed a telephone call from the private office of the government at Montgomery, to his associates in New York. This line was kept busy for two and a half hours throughout the sale of the bonds.

"The Unluckiest Soldier of Them All"

"GENTLEMAN JOHNNY" SURRENDERS
PAINTING BY F.C. YOHN

Picture of the surrender, courtesy Glens Falls (N. Y.) Insurance company; portraits of Burgoyne and Gates from "The Turning Point of the Revolution," courtesy Houghton Mifflin company.

GEN. HORATIO GATES

luckless British commander" who, among the many varied types of soldier who fought on either side in the Revolutionary conflict, was the "unluckiest soldier of them all."

Just why this "failure" should be so appealing to Americans who are supposed to be only interested in those who win success is difficult to say. The answer may be found in some of the names that were applied to him. "Gentleman Johnny" he was called in George Bernard Shaw's "The Devil's Disciple" and "Handsomeness Jack" he was called by his troops because he was physically the most attractive man in the British army. He was a general only because of political pull and through the influence of his wife's family, and as a military leader he was a strange mixture of sagacity and blundering incompetence. But if he made blunders, his superiors (by courtesy) made even worse ones. If he had brought disaster upon himself by his own mistakes alone, perhaps he would not win our sympathy and regard. But since he was the victim of circumstances and of a greater bungler than himself, perhaps it is the proverbial American attitude toward the "under dog" and the "goat" that causes us to think kindly, though somewhat pityingly, of him.

Born of a good family, Burgoyne at the outbreak of the Revolution was in his early fifties. He had taken part in the Seven Years' war, serving in the Chertbourg, St. Cas and Belle Isle expeditions, during which he achieved some prominence by his capture of Valencia d'Alcantara. One important result of this military service was that here he learned the strategy of dividing his force in the face of the enemy as a "diversion," which he tried to apply in the campaign which was doomed to failure.

At the outbreak of the war he was ordered to America and had a minor part in the Battle of Bunker Hill. He won his advancement in the army by intrigue and family support and he was proud of the latter for, as he frankly said, "On any other ground I should blush to ask preferment," for he had already admitted that he considered himself "absolutely a cipher in a military light." Yet he had the presumption upon his return to England to seek the command of the expedition from Canada which was to "cut the Colonies in two" and he pulled the wires successfully enough to get it.

His plan was simple and in most respects entirely feasible. It was for his army to proceed from Quebec via Lake Champlain down the Hudson to Albany where it was to form a junction with Sir William Howe, who was to come up the Hudson from New York city and with Col. Harry St. Leger, who was to start from Oswego and sweep through the Mohawk valley, the "granary of the Revolution." One mistake he made was his plan to include in his army a force of German mercenaries and a force of Indians. He did not realize how bitterly the residents of the invaded region would resent the use of these "hirelings" from Europe and how difficult it would be to restrain the savages from atrocities against Tories as well as patriots. He was soon to be disillusioned on both scores.

But even with the handicaps under which he labored from the start, his expedition might have been successful had it not been for the fatal and unforgivable blunder made by his superior, Lord Germain, who as secretary of state for the American colonies was directing the American war. That incompetent (who incidentally had once been tried by court martial and found guilty of cowardice) wrote out the order for Sir William Howe to proceed north along the Hudson and meet General Burgoyne, but in his haste to leave for a pleasant week-end in the country, went away from his office without sending the order. The result was that Lord Howe, instead of marching north to meet "Gentleman Johnny," marched south against Philadelphia. So Gentleman Johnny, knowing nothing of Germain's bungling, plunged on into the wilderness and all the troubles which awaited him.

Gentleman Johnny may not have thought that the pen is mightier than the sword, but he evidently considered it a valuable adjunct, for he was given to "high-falutin'" writing of proclamations which brought down upon him much derision, not only from his enemies but from his supposed friends. At the outset of his campaign he addressed a proclamation to the "rebels" which he signed "By John Burgoyne, Esq., Lieutenant General of His Majesty's Armies in America, Col. of the Queen's regiment of Light F. Dragoons, Governor of Fort William in North Britain, One of the representatives of the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament and Commanding an army and fleet employed in an expedition from Canada" which not only brought a gale of raucous laughter from the "rebels," but caused Walpole to call him "General Hurlthrumbo."

Next he addressed a proclamation to his Indian allies, forbidding them to kill aged men, women, children and prisoners, which led Edmund Burke to make an ironic speech in the house of commons in which he imagined a riot on Tower hill and the keeper of His Majesty's lions addressing the animals in his charge thus: "My gentle lions, my humane bears, my sentimental wolves, my tender-hearted hyenas, go forth: but I exhort ye as ye are Christians and members of a civilized society not to hurt man, woman or child."

Although Burgoyne scored what appeared to be a great success at first in the capture of Ticonderoga (it was hailed as the capture of an American Gibraltar and King George offered to make him a knight of the Order of the Bath), his troubles increased as he proceeded further south. The Indians became more and more unruly and their atrocities, culminating in the famous murder of Jane McCrea, soon showed that they were more of a liability than an asset to the British commander. When he sent a force of Hessians under Baume and Breyman to capture American supplies at Bennington, Vt., the Green Mountain Boys, maddened at this invasion by the "foreigners," rose up under old General John Stark and inflicted a crushing defeat upon this force. St. Leger was held up before the walls of Fort Stanwix and the "grand expedition" was already tottering to its ruin.

But on September 14, 1777, Burgoyne "crossed the Rubicon" (the Hudson) and there the forces of General Gates, assisted by Arnold, Morgan and Schuyler (to whom belong the credit for the victory) fell upon him and his doomed army. The end came on October 17 when Burgoyne, his supplies cut off, all hope of aid from Howe or Sir William Clinton gone and his dream of conquest shattered, was forced to surrender. The surrender scene was dramatic. As Burgoyne handed his sword to Gates he said, "The fortune of war, General Gates, has made me your prisoner." Gates with a courtly salute, replied, "I shall always be ready to bear testimony that it has not been through any fault of your excellency." And in saying that the "victor" paid a tribute to the "vanquished" which Americans have echoed since that time and which has resulted in the high esteem in which "Gentleman Johnny" Burgoyne, "the unluckiest soldier of them all," is held to this day.

Beau in Hard Luck

Hassan Effendi, who prided himself as being the Beau Brummel, of Scutaria, has been arrested and sentenced to a week's imprisonment on the charge of wearing the baggy trousers known as chivalars, universally worn under the old regime, but prohibited recently by law of the new republic. The indignant dandy has carried the case to the Court of Appeals, alleging that he wears no antique chivalar and that the trousers which roused the suspicions of an ignorant police are actually the latest cry in civilized garb, imported from the United States as "charleston" trousers.

each other, will prove those statements to be true. In 1777 these two generals were commanding armies which were fighting what was destined to be one of the "fifteen decisive battles of the world." That was the Battle of Saratoga, and when it was over, General Burgoyne, the vanquished, was handing his sword to General Gates, the victor, and this surrender meant that England's greatest effort to crush her rebellious colonies had failed and the cause of American independence had been saved.

That was more than a century and a half ago, but, by all the rules of the "success" axioms, the name of Horatio Gates should have come thundering down the years as one of the greatest heroes of the new Republic and the name of John Burgoyne should have long ago been lost in obscurity. For was not Gates a success and Burgoyne a failure? But what has happened? How many statues have ever been erected to the memory of General Gates by a grateful nation? So far as the present chronicler knows—none! How many Americans can tell you anything about Horatio Gates, except that their remembrance of their school histories makes his name sound vaguely familiar? How many biographies have ever been written about him? It is impossible to recall a single one!

As for General Burgoyne, of course, it would not be reasonable to expect Americans to erect statues to his memory, although it must be admitted that there might be as much reason for immortalizing his name in bronze or stone as there has been for some men it has thus honored. As for the average American knowledge of Burgoyne, possibly next to Cornwallis, he, of all the British generals of the Revolution, is best known. But most interesting of all is the fact that within the last few months there have appeared two books whose wide sale indicates that Americans are genuinely interested in Gen. John Burgoyne. They are "Gentleman Johnny Burgoyne—Misadventures of an English General of the Revolution," written by F. J. Hudleston and published by the Bobbs-Merrill company, and "The Turning Point of the Revolution, or Burgoyne in America," written by Hoffman Nickerson and published by Houghton Mifflin company.

Although both authors are military men (Mr. Hudleston is librarian of the British war office, and Mr. Nickerson served on the general staff of the A. E. F. during the World War), their books are not essentially military studies of an important and history-making campaign. Read together the two volumes do give a complete picture of that campaign, but they do much more—they give a comprehensive view of the political and social life of that period in history. But most of all, they paint an unforgettable portrait of a "lovable but

Quartz Crystals, Nature's Tuning Forks Used By Bell Laboratories to Simplify Television

When Introduced Into Vacuum Tube Oscillators They Hold Accurately the Frequency of Oscillation to Their Own Frequency.

Quartz Crystal Mounted for Insertion in Vacuum Tube Oscillator

Final Grinding of a Quartz Crystal

By J. O. PERRINE

A SMALL crystal of quartz, about the size and form of a small oblong pill box, represents the latest advance in the simplification of television systems by doing away with a complete telephone line or radio transmitting and receiving system. The use of this natural mineral, cut from its rather irregular crystal form to rectangular box shape, is the latest contribution of the Bell Telephone Laboratories in simplifying television, first demonstrated in April, 1927. Quartz is one of the common, natural minerals. It abounds in rocks and is an essential element of granite. It is the hardest substance, next to the diamond. The amethyst is a form of quartz colored purplish or bluish violet. Blue quartz is the sapphire. Agate and onyx are other forms of quartz. The chemist calls it silicon dioxide. The white sands of the sea beach consist largely of quartz. Pyrex glass contains much quartz.

Just how this piece of lifeless and adamant crystal plays a role in television will be explained later.

About Television Operation

In practically all methods of television so far developed, it is necessary to have two rotating discs about two feet in diameter, one at the transmitting end and one at the receiving end. Each of these discs has about fifty small holes arranged in a single spiral near the edge. At the transmitting end the subject is "scanned," that is, light streaks across the image to be sent in a series of lines as it streams through the holes of the rotating disc. Then the artificial electrical eye, namely, a photo-electric cell, sees the subject and sends electric currents to the receiver. At the receiving end a person, facing the second disc, looks through the rapidly moving holes to perceive the image re-created on the neon lamp. Now it is one of the very necessary factors in the successful operation of a television system that these two discs turn at exactly the same speed. When television was first demonstrated in 1927 these discs were kept in step by special electric motors compelled to rotate at the same speed through a single, master oscillator in New York, which sent controlling signals to the New York motor and also over a separate wire circuit to the motor in Washington. Over land telephone lines consisting of a special pair of wires connecting Washington and New York these signals traveled a third circuit separate from the two circuits used for carrying the light impressions and the spoken words. With radio television a special signal was sent out over a separate wave length for the purpose of keeping the two motors in step.

Role of Quartz Crystal

At this point comes the application of the quartz crystal. W. A. Harrison and J. W. Horton of the Bell Telephone Laboratories have been successful in making quartz crystal oscillators capable of maintaining their rate of vibration at almost exactly the same frequency. One oscillator would not vary from the other by as much as one vibration in 10,000,000. So the plan is to use one quartz crystal oscillator at the transmitting end and another oscillator at the receiving end. This system does away with the third telephone line or the third wave length as previously required. The two special motors are used as before, but they are kept in step by the separate quartz has an interesting and entirely different method of producing electricity. If one takes a crystal of quartz in his hands and gives it a sharp twist, then during the time of twisting, one side of the crystal will have positive electricity and the other side negative. This appearance of electricity when a crystal is given a sudden twist is common to a number of crystals, for example, rochele salt. This method of getting electricity by twisting is called the piezo method, from the Greek word piezo, meaning to press. In passing, it is interesting to note that Madame and Pierre Curie, discoverers of radium, were likewise discoverers of this piezo electric phenomenon in quartz. Now a most interesting thing about this piezo electric phenomenon is that if you connect the two wires from a battery to the opposite faces of a quartz crystal, the crystal will twist. To be sure, the twist is not large, in fact it is too small to be seen by the naked eye. It is sufficient, however, to feel and a crystal held in one's hand gives a definite sense of motion. So if one has a method of connecting and reversing the connection of the battery to the faces of the crystal, the application and the reversal of the electricity will cause the crystal to vibrate.

The frequency of the mechanical vibrations of the crystal depends on its length, breadth and thickness just as the vibrations of a violin or piano string depend on their length, and weight, or as those of a tuning fork on its dimensions. So a quartz crystal has a frequency of its own and the interesting thing is that it can be set in vibration by an alternating electric current instead of a blow by a hammer.

Quartz crystals may be thought of as nature's own tuning forks.

Oscillators and Their Control

Now a common form of oscillator is the vacuum tube oscillator, consisting of a plurality of coils, condensers, wires, resistances and a thermionic vacuum tube. For the purposes of television, however, these oscillators did not accurately maintain the number of vibrations per second. If one places a quartz crystal at the appropriate place in such an oscillator circuit the effect is that it acts like a governor on a steam engine—it accurately holds the frequency of oscillation to that of its own frequency. Its own frequency depends upon its length, breadth and thickness, and is, as said before, nature's tuning fork. Thus it keeps the frequency of the vacuum tube oscillator at a fixed number of vibrations per second.

Ease in "Framing" Picture

The advantages of this new quartz crystal control do not, however, lie entirely in the obviating of one interconnecting channel. It also simplifies the "framing" of the television image. Sometimes in a theatre a motion picture image becomes "out of frame." The effect is that the top of the picture is seen at the bottom of the screen and the bottom of the picture at the top. At the touch of a lever by the motion picture operator this can be instantly corrected so that the dog trotting along by his master is no longer doing it at the top edge of the picture, rather than at the bottom.

In television apparatus the failure of the two discs to start rotating at the same instant of time and to be at the same relative angular position produces a similar effect. With the use of the quartz oscillator control the remedy is quite simple. Connected with the receiver are two buttons. When one is pushed the whole picture slowly moves to the right while the other moves it to the left. By operation of the two push buttons a child can readily cause the image to be properly centered. When once properly "framed" the image will not wander more than one-third of its width in an hour. By thus placing the desired "framing" operation under the perfect control of the person at the receiving station, a great improvement has been made.

Despite these simplifications and improvements of the television system which represents a step well in advance of anything yet accomplished, engineers point out that it is still full of such complexities, that its field of application is quite restricted.

A Demonstration of Television at Bell Telephone Laboratories

crystal oscillators at the transmitter and the receiver. When thus controlled the motor at the receiver requires seven days to get out of step with the motor at the sender by as much as one revolution.

Quartz is Piezo-Electric

By obviating the third telephone line the quartz crystal does its part. The question naturally arises, how does it do its part in an oscillator? To explain this, let us digress a little.

Electrical phenomena are on every hand. Electricity can be produced in various ways. The ordinary battery is one. The great whirling generators in the power stations are another. Rubbing one's amber beads on the coat-sleeve is another. But
